

Love is not Love if it is does not serve and sacrifices

We are all born as children of the earth and as human just like other children of the earth we possess the ability called love? of love. It is one of the only common qualities we share with creators as long as humans have existed a term called humanity has been used to describe us and love is one of the most important part of humanity. But what is love?

Love doesn't have a definition because it is an abstract experience which can only be felt. But if we had to describe what love is to someone we tell them it is about giving without any expectation of receiving. It is about having and sharing. Love can only be observed and felt in the actions we perform. So what actions can be called love? Love in its true form is very selfless .Love is about putting the needs of others above your own. In its true form is very selfless .Love is about sacrificing when you put someone less first, you give them your time, your efforts, so they can be happy. You are sacrificing your own needs your time on them. But these sacrifices don't cause one pain, knowing what our sacrifice has achieved, has a much bigger sense of pride and satisfaction in the doer that the efforts are worth .It sacrifices sound like a heavy word which a lot of gravities but no, it is not something so huge as giving up your eyesight because your husband is blind. Sacrifices can be as small s giving up on your favorite TV show to spend time with the person you love.

Another action that defines love is serving when we think of love and serving we think about our country Sure there is nothing better than to become a soldier and serve the country. Sure there is nothing better than to become a soldier and serve the time assuming as that serving your mother with food in bed when she's sick or serving your father with water when the comes home, giving time to your family, giving time to anything you love. One may love playing guitar, then giving your time to your music to your guitar is also love besides serving your taxes and exercising your note and serving your Dharma. It is as easy as trying to gain knowledge and trying to understand it.

Sure there are other qualities that can describe love but serving and sacrificing are two prominent pillars to knowing what love is. Practicing and spreading love is after all our Kartavya as Humans
